

poems / A Closed Mind

"How could they agree to date around?
Don't they know jealousy abounds!
Multiple lovers is so taboo...
It must mean their love isn't true."
Yet just last week when you were free,
You juggled three guys simultaneously.
Went on dates with Jim, Jake and John
Till you picked one when bored of the con.
Now you scoff at those who ethically date,
Though you judged not your promiscuous state.
My friend, first self-reflection takes place,
Before judging another's chosen case.
Perhaps their love is deep and still real,
Even if they keep relations fluid.
Who are we to denounce their call?
Live and let love, have compassion for all.
For who knows what future tides may bring?
Situations differ for every being.
Better to have an open, accepting mind,
Than to limit love--we all seek to find.
