

poems / The Unknown

We fear what we cannot see,
The shadows that make us uneasy.
Our minds race to imagine the worst,
As anxiety bubbles and nerves are dispersed.

The future is shrouded in doubt,
New technologies that we can't figure out.
Artificial minds that seem so strange,
Capabilities that rapidly change.

But progress marches on its way,
Bringing innovations day by day.
To reject them all would be a mistake,
Closing our minds would stagnation make.

These tools are not things to dread,
But new frontiers to explore instead.
With open hearts and curious minds,
Beautiful discoveries we'll find.

So cast aside that worried frown,
Embrace the future, don't back down.
The unknown holds such potential,
If we greet it with temperance mental.
