

poems / Universe Whispers

When the universe whispers
The city buzzes with whispered wisdom,

Secrets shared between fleeting souls on crowded trains.
Heels click coded messages on sidewalks,

Hints of playful invitations in their rhythm.

Streetlights flicker all-seeing Morse,
Catching glimpses of trysts in shadowy corners.

Sirens sing arias of mischief and desire,
Beckoning nights filled with reckless fire.

When the universe whispers salaciously,
In buzzing neon tempting late revelry,
In pulsing crowds where spirits intertwine,
In electric hums of pleasures divine.

What knowledge breathes beneath this tangled veil?

If I press my ear to urban life's mad tale,
Will I unravel its hidden mysteries,
And glimpse the truth that within me lies?

The city whispers of journeys untold
Of passions, dreams, and mysteries to unfold.

When the universe whispers, let wisdom guide,
Step boldly forth with wonder as your guide.
